Description

Rodrigo Aranjuelo, Argentine composer and producer based in New York City, presents a preview of his new work, FUTURE NATIVES PROJECT. With folk roots and a strong cinematic narrative, imagine the intricate identity of a future generation with no territorial imprint.

The first single of the Project, composed by Rodrigo, is titled Erial. And evokes a Folk rhythm originally from the north-east of Argentina called Chamamé, which in Guaraní means "things you do with no plan or method."

With a futuristic video aesthetic, it seeks to portray the vast and desolate valleys of the Andes mountains and makes us navigate through scenes of nostalgic emotions. The talented Argentine guitarist Federico Diaz took part in the recording in Brooklyn in mid-2019, who with his impeccable performance, leaves evidence of his deep knowledge of Argentine folklore.

FUTURE NATIVES PROJECT will begin their tour in 2021 and will soon continue releasing new singles as a preview of their show that promises to be an ambitious sound and visual proposal.

Production and Rights

The video was produced entirely by Rodrigo Aranjuelo in New York City using 3d animation and original film footage from the Uspallata Valley, Mendoza, Argentina.
